A Brave Boy.

Henry Courtney, the 14 year old son of John Courtney, went to Sweet Fork one evening last week in company with Newman Newell, a young man some twenty years of age, and after they had eaten their dinner the bunch basket with some silver spoons and forks in it fell into the water, and Mrs. Newell, thinking the water shallow, jumped in to save them, when he found to his horror he was in a sink hole. He screamed to Henry to save him, as he was drowning. Henry then displayed wonderful presence of mind for one so young. He remembered seeing a skiff with only one oar up the river and he ran after it, jumping into the skiff which fast had to be fastened, he reached the unfortunate man who sank the third time and caught him by the tips of his fingers, which was all there was visible above the water and held to him with one hand while he held on to the boat and the bar with the other until he pulled the almost unconscious man partially out of the water, where he held him, talking to him and encouraging him until he regained consciousness, screaming all the while for help. At last Mr. Newell was able to hold on to the boat with one hand although too weak to speak, and Henry told him they were rapidly drifting down stream to a large tree in the water where limbs would enable them to steady the boat so as to pull him in.

In the meantime the screams of the brave boy attracted a man on the bridge who came hurriedly to their relief but unfortunately he was unable to swim, ran for some lumbermen up the river, but before they reached the drowning man, Henry, with his precious charge, had reached the old tree and steadyng the boat, with a mighty effort pulled him into the boat, displaying greater courage than the average man possesses.

The Camel's Eye.

The Nile is essentially a river of sense and mystery. Even the animals turn their beautiful soft eyes upon you as if you were intruding upon their silence and reserve. Never were the eyes in a human head so beautiful as a camel's. There is a simple softness, an appealing plaintiveness in their expression which draws at your sympathies like the look in the eyes of a horseback. It means that, with your opportunities, you might have done more with your life. Your mother looks at you that way sometimes in church, when the sermon touches a particularly raw nerve in your spiritual make-up. I always feel like apologizing when a camel looks at me. —Lillian Bell in the July Woman's Home Companion.

Telephone Announcement.

Manager Marmaduke has received notice that the Missouri & Kansas Telephone Company is preparing to make a reduction in the charge for use of its toll lines.

The Company has been making a careful analysis of the toll business for the past year to see how it would be possible to readjust the toll tariff and give the public a lower rate. It is found that as people become more familiar with the use of the Long Distance telephone they consume less time in transacting their business over it, and that instead of using it on an average of five minutes per call as formerly, the average has been reduced to about three minutes per call.

It is now proposed to readjust the tariff schedule to a three minute basis so as to give the public the benefit of this shortening of messages. The new tariff will also be calculated on direct distances between points, instead of the actual line mileage as heretofore, which in many cases will materially reduce the former rates. The new method of considering both time and distance will make the rates more equitable to all users of the service.

The present rate of 25 cents for short distances will be continued, but the list of towns that can be reached for that rate will be more than double under the new schedule and the Telephone Company will still pay the war tax. The change will no doubt materially reduce the revenue for a time, but the company believes that eventually there will be enough greater use of the telephone, more than compensate for the temporary loss.

It is generally understood that but one conversation at a time can take place over a telephone circuit, but such is not the fact. This often makes it appear that the Long Distance Telephone rates are higher than the cost of telegraphing, but when it is remembered that a conversation by telephone is both message and answer and that 100 words can be spoken per minute, the telephone is really the cheaper. The Long Distance Telephone has developed a field not occupied by the telegraph and the progressive business man, quick to appreciate such an excellent means for expediting business, has added the telephone without diminishing his use of the telegraph.

Under the schedule the rate from this City to Kansas City will be 50 cents for three minutes' conversation.
